Yesterday shortly after nine o'clock in the forencon the gravest apprehensions were in a measure resulted. A young man named Sam Darrah, an employ of Beck & Adams, was working about a joint of the large pipe in the ditch, when the banks gave way, and the gravel slid down upon him in a mass, burying him above the hips, and bruising and cutting him severely. He was removed as quickly as the nature of his imprisonment rendered possible, and taken to his home in East Wheeling.

Scarcely had he left, however, when the banks on both sides some feet above the scene of the first accident, suddenly gave way simultaneously, and buried three work-men almostentirely. They were Pat Gerighty, of North Wheeling, Marcus Meaheh and Ben Ruggarber, two Germans. Their fellow work-Yesterday shortly after nine o'clock in th

Their fellow work men worked with desperation born of sympathy for their sufferings, but it was necessarily some time before all were rescued, fluggarber was not seriously hurt, being worst brüised about the hips and abdomen. He managed, with aid, to walk to a convenient store room, whence he was removed to his boarding house. Meaheh was not so fortunate, but had to betaken from the place in a conveyance. Gerighty and he were both ghasily as death when rescued.

Dr. Uhlrich was summoned by Gerighty's friends, and found him badly injured. He expressed the opinion last night that his patient was Iatally, hurt. There was a gash cut clear into the peivic cavity, and some sand and gravel is believed to have penetrated to that cavity. He is also gravely injured internally. The doctor expected peritonitis to develop by this morning, when death would be almost only a question of time.

Dr. Hupp attended Darrah, and regards him as seriously, though not very dangerously hurt. The nature of his injuries is such, though, that their exact extent cannot be reliably told till this morning.

Dr. Jepson was called in both the other cases. He found Ruggarber not dangerously thurt, when he were been avoided by more careful provision against such accident. The whole affair is sad, dad not the less and that it could have been avoided by more careful provision against such accident. This was made after the event. The top of districts would not be admitted to seats in the House of Representatives. It was sug-gested that we allow the present districts to remain, and elect a Congressman at large for the fourth man. But there is precedent for rejecting such a representative. John A. Logan was once so elected in Illinois, but the House refused to seat him. If Congress acts upon the matter before we adjourn, of course we will then redistrict the State. If not, the only course to pursue is to adjourn without we will then redistrict the State. If not, the nuly course to pursue is to adjourn without outling the matter, and if later in the year longress allots West Virginia four Repre-entatives, the necessity of calling an extra-ordinary session of the Legislature will be a matter for the Governor to decide. Down at Washington there is some difference of opin-on as to whether or not Congress will reach the matter of the responsitionment of Repre-

san that it could have been avoided by more careful provision against such accident. This was made after the event. The top of the ditch was widened and props used at several places. These simple precautions taken in the first place would not only have prevented the accident, but kept things in a better shape generally where the work is going on.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

ST. CLAIRSVILLE. A case of more than ordinary interest wa

last week tried in the Court of Commi Pleas of Belmont county. In the spring of 1876, the people of Belmont and Jefferson Joseph Iddings, a prominent real estate and stock dealer in these counties, residing near St. Clairsville, had failed, with liabilities amounting to about $25,000, and had fied the country, leaving but little available assets. smoothing to about $20,000, and man nea the country, leaving but little available assets. Subsequent events fully confirmed the rumor. The liabilities were principally in notes, bearing the name of Joseph Iddings, and those of his three brothers, Henry, Isaac and George. In the course of time these notes were presented to the brothers for payment, and the holders thereof were considerably surprised to be informed by the brothers that their names thereon were forged by Joseph. Some of the creditors did not think Joseph guilty of forgery, and suit to compel payment by the brothers was instituted. The first case tried was that of James Blakemore, since deceased, who held two notes calling for $1.700. This case was tried at the fall term of court in 1877, and the jury disagreed, eleven of them being for the plaintiff and one sticking for the defendant. However at the same term of Court, before a special jury, Robert Thompson, who also held one of the notes, obtained a verdict for the full amount of note and interest, but the verdict was, on motion of counsel for defendants set aside by the Court and a new trial granted. At the spring term of the Court in 1870 the Blake-nore case was again tried to a special jury, and was, we order of the Court of the Court of the courter and and we had the Court of the Court and and we had the Court of the Court and and we had the Court of the Court and and we had contracted to the courte of the Court and and we had set a courter of the Courte of the Courter counter of the courte of the more case was again tried to a special jury, and was, by order of the Court, required to be kept together in the custody of the Sheriff as in criminal cases, and a verdict for the full amount of the notes and interest awarded. This verdict was also, on motion of counsel for defendants, set aside and a new trial granted. The creditors then turned their attention to the sprehension and arrest of Joseph, and employed detectives to hunthim up, and in March, 1889, he was sreated in Indiana while driving a flock of sheep to market and returned to Belmont county and fodged in jail. He positively refused to permit bail, which was freely offered, and at the summer term of Court in 1880 he was indicated by the Grand Jury for the high crime of forgery, and at the same term put upon his trial. Joe admitted that he had signed his brothers' names to a number of notes, but claimed that he had their consent and a general authority to do so. The trial of Joe Iddings will ever remain memorable in the annals of Belmont county criminal trials on account of the deep interest taken them forgeries, and would do nothing towards adjusting the indebtedness, and that when he wrote them appealing to term to settle up the indebtedness, so that he could recurn to his motherless children, they answered him, proposing to send him means to take him to Australia or some other foreign port, but not one dollar looking to his return.

After able arguments from the counsel engaged and a lengthy charge by the court, the jury returned and in a few minutes thereafter announced that they had agreed upon a verdiet, and were returned to the jury box. The clerk propounded the usual questions: "Gentlemen of the jury, do you find the prisoner at the bar guilty, as he stands indicted, or not guilty?" The foreman arose and said "Not guilty." A shout went up from those present, followed by another which was suppressed with difficulty by the officers of the court, and "Joe" arose a free man to meet the hearty congratulations of many friends. The civil cases have remained state quo until last week, not with standing the plaintiff, have insisted upon trial, when the case of Blakemore was again tried to a special jury, who on last Saturday evening returned a verdict for the plaintiff to the sum of $2.614, whereupon the counsel for the defendants gave notice of a motion for a new trial, which is not likely to be granted, as in the trials already had, fiftynine of the sixty jurors, including the State case, have said by their verdict that Joe Iddings had authority to sign the names of his brothers, and that they must pay them.

Those engaged in watching that no contamination of others comes from the small-pox patient in the First ward have a hard time of it, as those in the house sometimes persist in getting out and some friends outside persist in getting in.

Charley Bradford and Wm. Oliver were arrested Monday for attempting to burglarize Mrs. Stroble's boarding bouse on Belmont street. They were found in the hall in the middle of the house. Their defense is that they were there to see what was making a moaning that they had heard.

The Disciples are now busily negaring for the local properties for the properties for the properties of the see that was making a moaning that they had heard.

moaning that they had heard.

The Disciples are now busily preparing for their annual concert at the church. It will come off on Friday evening, January 27. For many years this church has had a concert at New Year's, but this year it had to be postponed till the congregation had time for preparation after the long series of religious meetings.

Transfer of Iron Property.

NASHVILLE, TENK., January 9.—Negotiations have been concluded, transferring the entire property of the Southern States Coal, Iron & Land Company, consisting of thousands of acres of land, two of the largest blast furnaces in the United States, iron works, etc., to the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company, with headquarters in this city. The Southern States Coal, Iron & Land Company was established at South Pittsburgh, Marion county, this State, by English capitalists. The consolidation constitutes the largest manufacturing and mining enterprise in the South. Transfer of Iron Property Smallpox Increasing at Pittabu
